Myelin basic protein (MBP) does not alter the infection of human monocytic cells by human immunodeficiency virus type 1 (HIV-1). Myelin basic protein (MBP) is a major constituent of myelin and a protein with several immune functions of MBP have been reported, including the induction of antibody production and the suppression of inflammatory responses. Since an increased level of HIV-1 expression and immunological abnormalities have been suggested in patients with multiple sclerosis, it was thought that MBP might have some influence on the pathogenesis of human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) infection and pathogenesis of multiple sclerosis. Our data showed that culture supernatants of human monocytes treated with MBP before HIV-1 infection did not alter the virus expression, as judged by reverse transcriptase activity, p24 antigen, and mRNA expression. In contrast, antiviral action of MBP in human T cells was shown. MBP increased HIV-induced cytopathic effect in promonocytic U937 cells, with an enhanced release of soluble mediators such as interferon-gamma.
