Imitam (tricyclic antidepressant) is metabolised in the liver, predominantly by hydroxylation with subsequent glucuronidation of imipramine to desipramine. Preclinical and clinical trials suggest that one major effect of imipramine is the inhibition of serotonin uptake in the brain. As a result, reduced serotonin reuptake in the hippocampus and amygdala could lead to an improvement in depression. The antidepressant effect of imipramine has been demonstrated in placebo-controlled studies. However, as a result of its pharmacokinetic profile there is a daily fluctuation in plasma imipramine level. Plasma level measurements indicate that more than 50% of total plasma imipramine is bound to plasma proteins. The concentration of imipramine in the brain may also be low because of its short half life (1.5 hours) and rapid metabolism in the liver. After imipramine treatment plasma imipramine is 10-20 fold higher than in the brain. Treatment of depressed patients with imipramine for 8 weeks is associated with an increase in plasma imipramine levels and an increase of the free fraction. The therapeutic effect of imipramine
