The introduction of conjugate vaccines has reduced the incidence of invasive meningococcal disease (IMD) in Denmark since 1996. We studied the Danish IMD epidemiology for 5 years, following the introduction of a bivalent meningococcal C (MenC) conjugate vaccine in April 2011. We estimated point and season-specific incidence rates, time-series regression analysis for cumulative incidence and attributable risk, and proportion attributable to vaccine from April 2011 to April 2015. The overall annual number of IMD cases declined by 66%,
