Search This Blog Thursday, March 5, 2012 According to two separate tips, Windows 8 will be released in late April. Of course both versions of Microsoft's new OS will be available with a trial on Windows Store, unlike with Windows 7, which only offered the trial on the pre-installation DVD. At the same time, Windows 8 Pro will ship with new versions of Windows Explorer, Office, Internet Explorer and other applications. This information has been sent to german edition WinITP's tips. According to this document, Windows 8's apps will be more polished in comparison with Windows 7, and Microsoft will change their interface more often, considering to attract more users. Besides, this installation document refers to Windows Media Player as the default media player of Windows 8 and Windows 8 Pro on x86. This means that other players like VLC and Windows Media Center have not been removed yet. We will hear the public preview of Windows 8 in April, and just may also be released to retailers or channels in late April or early May. As expected, Windows 8 will be released in April, and may also be released in late April or early May. Moreover, Windows 8 Pro might be released in May, together with Windows 8. Meanwhile, both Windows 8 and Windows 8 Pro will be sold with a 60-day trial version, and the final release version may include new apps and features compared to the trial version. Microsoft is also rumored to change the system requirements for Windows 8 and Windows 8 Pro, by increasing the processor's speed. Previously, Microsoft referred to all Windows 8 editions as x86 and x64, however, now the company will release an x86/x64 version. Adobe for 6d1f23a050
