"It's like not caring," one of the people said. For some former employees, the name change meant losing an important part of their personal identification. "I'm 100 percent into David, but it was very hard to tell myself to stop calling him that," said a former manager, who spoke on condition of anonymity to avoid trouble with her former bosses. "Now I think it's not a good thing, that he's really trying to hide." At the same time, the company's new name makes it easier to position itself in a crowded field. And it's easier to Google without necessarily searching your own name first. While Wolfrath said the company will always be "David & Goliath," it's also a stepping stone into the big leagues. "I think we're looking at a 20-year run now," he said. "But what we've done, we've doubled the company every year and we're now at a major presence with around 700 people. We were still a family business, but now we're a public company with a major presence." For his part, David Wolfrath doesn't seem to mind. He Mas from Latina Search form P&G to Sell Its Makeups Businesses Publicis Groupe's P&G has announced that it plans to sell its global beauty, personal care and home care businesses with an estimated annual retail value of $6.1 billion to Coty. P&G's beauty unit included brands such as L'Oreal, Klear and Playtex, while its home care division included brands such as Brita, Mr. Muscle and Pampers, which would have a combined worldwide retail value of $5.6 billion. The home care division had revenues of $1.7 billion in 2011. "These sale negotiations have been under active development for several months and have been a priority of the business," said Richard Drevet, P&G's chief financial officer. "We believe this transaction will maximize shareholder value and enable P&G to more effectively focus its capital to meet its growth plans." "The addition of P&G's women's beauty and home care businesses to the Coty portfolio will result in synergies that will benefit our customers and consumers worldwide," said Nadeem Mazen, president and CEO, Coty, Inc. "We believe it is a win-win for our consumers, consumers and P&G." Coty expects the transaction will close by September 2014, pending approval by P&G's shareholders and other approvals, with an estimated cost of $11.50 per share. P&G didn't specify why it needed to sell these businesses. However, it might have to do with the fact that its two top markets, beauty and home care, are not moving as fast as it hoped (or expected). "As fashion consumers increasingly shift to media, P&G has been looking for a source of growth. This business presents a growth opportunity to 6d1f23a050
