Young and old rats were observed in the laboratory in order to compare their exploration of food and other stimuli, as well as their performance on a spatial maze. Both groups spent more time exploring the food dish than did young males, and old rats performed more poorly than young rats in the spatial maze. Overall, rats were more active in the open field than in the maze. There was no effect of housing condition, food restriction, or social rank on rats' behavioral measures, and interactions between these variables and age were not evident. 6d1f23a050
