In June, Mr Hunt pledged to hold a referendum to ask voters if they wanted to see the smoking ban extended. But in a letter to the Daily Telegraph newspaper, he has admitted he was wrong to think the time was right. His comments come amid a debate over whether the government should seek to implement a ban nationwide. "We have reached the conclusion that the time is not right and never will be for the introduction of the kinds of legislation that would give smokers the choice of lighting up in certain parts of their homes or workplaces," he said. The government's decision was reported earlier by the Daily Telegraph, which quoted an unnamed senior official as saying "this is a commitment that Jeremy Hunt made
