
Overthrow The Demon Queen

But Spenser does not hesitate to tell us that he has the inspiration to compose an epic and to use his own name as title to it. Thus his poem, which is traditionally called the Faerie Queene, is in reality the Spenseriad, or Spenser's Epithalamion. With this obvious plan to present Elizabeth as the Queen of Peace, and to show her in the guise of the ancient Queen of Heaven, Spenser begins. He says he began writing about the death of his first love, one Anelida, and from this he explains that he began to study heroic poetry. Anelida was the Queen's name, and the name of one of the deities whom Spenser calls "mighty Nimue." Nimue here, as in other passages of the poem, is the one who wrote the names in the stars, and thus came to be called "the Queen of Heaven." Nimue is the patron goddess of the poets, and Spenser is about to show us the queen as the patroness of poets and of the Queen of England. Celia Wird is the oldest of the four girls, born to demonic parents who were visiting Chicago when their baby daughter was conceived. The pregnancy was put on hold, and when the child was born, the parents quickly arranged for her to be adopted. By the time she was eighteen, Celia had grown into a beautiful young woman of twenty-one who was heading into the next phase of her life. Then she heard a terrifying scream, and the next thing she knew, she woke up in her high school classroom. She had been possessed by a demon, and she had no memory of how she got to the school or what the terrible screams were that she had heard. The girl has a special ability: she can see into the future, and she can talk to demons. While in college, she began to hear voices. She was convinced that she had become a medium like her parents, and she was haunted by the certainty that she had lived through a terrible event or would get involved in an apocalyptic battle that would put the human race on the brink of oblivion. Then she heard the scream again, and the voices told her to follow a man into the street. She started to get ready and headed outside. She saw the man she had just been talking to and followed him. After that, she couldn't remember anything until she opened her eyes in her high school classroom, and it appeared that her parents had put her in the school for the purpose of showing her how she really looked. She was born with silver hair and hazel eyes that turned red when she was angry, and she was tall and thin with brown hair and a slightly crooked nose. A year later, she graduated from college and married a young man named Aric. Celia is looking for peace of mind, and she wants to be a good person. She wants to be a mother, and she wants Aric's love no matter what the cost. But they are all monsters in the eyes of the world. We meet Celia in the next volume of the series, Bound By Winter. Sarah Bartell is the youngest of the four girls. Like her older sisters, Sarah was the product of a failed sacrifice. A young girl of about sixteen was born to parents in Philadelphia, and they paid a witch to put an evil spell on the child in exchange for cash. When she turned twenty-one, the young woman was in a hospital giving birth to a baby girl. The witch had failed to make the spell permanent, but the young woman was already pregnant. The witch informed the parents that they were responsible for the baby, and they quickly adopted her, fearing that if she was left in the world, she would destroy their other two daughters. Sarah grew up as Sarah Bartell, but when she turned twenty-one, she tried to join the army. Since she was found to be too weak to fight, she was sent to the hospital. The place looked like a prison, and she was told that she was a criminal, an outcast among her own people. After escaping, Sarah became a beggar. She wanted to get back to the army, and for that, she needed money. But she couldn't ask her parents for it because she was still the bastard child. So she joined a local gang and began collecting for them.
