Softpedia had its sources for this software package to be changed in order to gain more publicity for the software, and hopefully, more downloads. This change was clearly a factor in the rating given to the software at 5/10, and not a factor in the rating given to the product itself. Softpedia has, in this case, absolutely no responsibility for the user being sold Fake Folder Clone Product Key (it was given away in an attempt to gain downloads). Field of the Invention The invention relates to a gas discharge lamp having a light source arranged within a discharge vessel filled with mercury, which comprises electrodes coupled to supply lines that can be driven in alternation to cause a discharge. The invention further relates to a method of operating such a gas discharge lamp. 2. Description of the Related Art Gas discharge lamps are widely known and are used in various applications, for example as luminaires and/or indicator lights. In recent years, gas discharge lamps have gained increasing popularity as solid-state lighting sources, replacing incandescent and other lighting sources. The advantages of these gas discharge lamps over incandescent and other lighting sources include a more efficient use of energy and longer life. Gas discharge lamps include a light source such as a fluorescent or phosphorescent gas discharge lamp, an ionizable gas in a vessel that is ionized by a trigger. The trigger is coupled to an electrical circuit that supplies current to the light source. The trigger is typically designed to be hermetically sealed within the gas discharge vessel to prevent ingress of ambient air, which has a deleterious effect on the gas discharge lamp. By alternatingly applying current to the light source, it is possible to cause the trigger to discharge to produce a light output. For example, alternating current may be applied via an electrical conductor to an electrical conductor, which is coupled to an electrode of the light source. However, it is often desirable to operate the gas discharge lamp as a stand-alone device. For example, a plurality of gas discharge lamps may be provided that are each coupled to an electrical circuit to form a lighting system that is either connected to or disconnected from a main power source.

Fake Folder Clone is a small piece of software that helps you protect folders by making them system directories. The interface of the program is outdated, resembling the classical design adopted in the Windows '98 and '95 operating systems. In addition to that, the UI is minimal and therefore, any type of user is going to be able to protect sensitive information, regardless of their previous experience with the IT world. The main window displays all the actions available in the application, such as browsing for a folder, a box for inputting the chosen password, and two buttons that enable you to protect an item and remove its protection status. When this software utility safeguards a folder, it transforms it into a system directory, namely the Recycle Bin. This means the item is going to behave exactly like the trash container, and all the usual actions are available, such as emptying its contents or restoring all files or just selected ones. Even the icon is similar. After processing a folder, Fake Folder Clone displays a message informing you if the operation was successful or not. You should also know this application does not require installation, meaning that you can place it anywhere on the hard drive and even on a portable device, such as a USB flash drive. The latter action enables you to use the software utility on any computer that you have access to. Furthermore, since installation is not a prerequisite, it does not update the Windows registry with new keys, nor the Start menu. In conclusion, seeing that you can protect folders with just a few clicks, Fake Folder Clone is an efficient and reliable piece of software. The program is lightweight and user-friendly, thus a smart choice when it comes to safeguarding sensitive information.
