This form also loads a table into the table view. I then have a second form that is used to load another table into a tableview. I can share the values between the two tables by using the sharedObject. When I create a new instance of the first form, the sharedObject works perfectly. When the second form is closed and reopened, it stops working. When the second form is created, the sharedObject gets a blank value (null). Is there a way to get this to work properly? Do I need to pass the sharedObject a global variable instead of using a variable in the constructor of the form? A: If the second form is your main form, try to store the reference to the sharedObject in the Application class. If it is a dialog or another form, you can use a property bag to store the value. 1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to a polishing pad and, more particularly, to a polishing pad for chemical mechanical polishing (CMP) processes. 2. Description of the Related Art Chemical mechanical polishing (CMP) is one of the most important techniques for planarization in the manufacture of integrated circuits. In CMP, a thin layer of a polishing pad is rotated against the surface of the integrated circuit wafer on which a metal layer has been deposited. Polishing slurry containing polishing chemicals, e.g. an alkaline agent, and abrasive particles, e.g. silica or alumina, is fed onto the polishing pad, and the polishing pad is pressed against the surface of the wafer. The polishing pad is rotated relative to the wafer, and the wafer is rotated relative to the polishing pad. The motion of the wafer relative to the polishing pad causes the chemical to react and the abrasive particles to impact the surface of the wafer, removing surface material to provide a planar surface. An important part of the CMP process is the polishing pad. The polishing pad may comprise a non-woven material, such as a polyurethane
