Evaluation of regional myocardial blood flow distribution in humans. In humans, flow distributions in the left ventricular (LV) wall can be assessed with the radioactive microsphere technique, which measures blood flow to a fixed series of discrete locations. To test the accuracy and precision of the technique, 18 to 24 blood-pool radiopaque microspheres were injected into the LV of five dogs. Microspheres were selectively injected into two discrete LV regions: a subendocardial region and a subepicardial region. No evidence of blood flow to a second discrete zone within each region was found with the radioactive microsphere technique. In humans, we examined 10 healthy young men. Regional blood flow was measured during paced electrocardiography (ECG). For steady-state exercise at a workload of 40 watts, blood flow was distributed in the LV wall as follows: subendocardial region 13%, subepicardial region 26%, and septal region 40%. The technique of radioactive microspheres permits selective, accurate, and repeatable local measurements of blood flow in humans.

Sir, The world has reached a turning point regarding the COVID-19 pandemic. We have all become aware of the seriousness of the pandemic and its importance for every single individual's health and life, and thus, everyone is trying to protect themselves from the virus. Nevertheless, prevention and protection methods are not enough. How can we stop the infection during the incubation period? Can we develop a vaccine against the virus? These issues are being investigated in many laboratories. From this perspective, we had a unique opportunity to review the papers published over the last 6 weeks. We analyzed the nature of the selected articles, as well as the number of papers that have been published. The articles were assessed to see if they were submitted to journals accredited by the Committee on Publication Ethics (COPE). The articles were selected on the basis of the title and abstract with consideration given to the basic and clinical research studies, which described the methods, materials, and outcomes of an experiment. All papers were assessed by three authors from an academic institution, as well as an intern. Three of these authors (GIR, A.M, and P.G) are surgeons and have a combined experience of 10 years of clinical practice
