The authors assessed the association between FABP2 C1420G (rs1799883) polymorphism and the risk of coronary artery disease (CAD) among 1087 unrelated patients with confirmed CAD, and 1273 unrelated healthy individuals from the Czech population. The frequency of the polymorphic allele was 0.0476 and 0.0548, respectively. In the population of CAD patients, allele G was found more frequently in the female gender (adjusted $p = 0.039$), as well as in patients with myocardial infarction ($p = 0.030$), whereas in the healthy individuals allele G was more often represented in the male gender ($p = 0.000$). In addition, the association of genotype with myocardial infarction was only observed in the population of healthy volunteers (adjusted $p = 0.001$). Thus, FABP2 C1420G polymorphism seems to be a possible risk factor for CAD, but not for myocardial infarction. Tag Archives: isra jonasson Last week I visited the home of a dear friend in the suburb of Olympic Park. We had a lovely time snacking and catching up, but what really struck me about our visit was the wall of books she has around her lounge room. Rebecca
