Backup and recovery software (also known as disk imaging software or data backup software) has a wide range of uses, including forensic backup, system image backups, and providing a second copy of data. Features include file-level, application-level, and volume-level backup and restore, and compressed and encrypted backups. Backup software can also provide the capability to securely transport data over a local area network, the Internet, or a wide area network using FTP, webdav or other protocols. Other uses include migrating data from one computer to another, creating a clone of a hard disk, and bare-metal backup of a physical system. It can be used to create a disc image of a computer's hard drive or other media, which can be used to restore to a new computer or to reinstall an operating system. Backup software is typically bundled with system imaging and/or system recovery applications, which are used to restore the backup data. Some of these imaging applications have other uses, such as creating an installation disc of an operating system. Acronis True Image WD Edition Software 2020. . . .Expertise and attitude of hospital pharmacists. This study was designed to evaluate and compare the ability of hospital pharmacists and specialists in pharmacotherapy to identify the prescription errors made by junior hospital doctors and make suggestions to improve clinical practices. The study was conducted in a university hospital in Athens, Greece, between August-September 2000. The number of drugs prescribed by the junior hospital doctors was checked in their medical files. A group of hospital pharmacists (n=50) was asked to identify the prescribers of these drugs. The drugs were classified as mistakes by the pharmacists; their suggestions were recorded. The association between drug therapy errors and the practice of hospital pharmacists was tested using univariate and multivariate logistic regression. The results showed that the positive predictive value of the pharmacists' assessment was 0.86. The characteristics significantly associated with a low score given by the hospital pharmacists were the residents' age, the number of medications prescribed and the seniority of the pharmacists. However, after adjusting for the potential risk factors, the statistical significance of the association between the error and the odds ratio of being a hospital pharmacist decreased considerably..
