Adobe Lightroom for iPad has been a delight for my photo editing and monthly travels. By viewing the SD and HD formats, this app does not miss the moment, and with the recent update, it has gone to whole new level. By utilizing the latest Apple features in iOS 11, the time is also saved and the experience is improved. Adobe has a great program that has particular implications on the small screen of an iPad, but the implementation and the iOS 11 integration are excellent. I wish my photo editing would be less stressful, but for me, the benefits outnumber the hassles. To sum it up, my overall impression of Adobe Photoshop is very good. I believe that they are the premiere software for the CC format, and I think they are a necessity if you have been using Photoshop for most of your photographic life or if you want to switch over to it. Adobe seems to be perfectly aware of the new workflow new users demand and I am not afraid to say that it works. As any recent Photoshop review would tell you, this is software that needs to be available to everyone and it is available. However, I would like to see Adobe devote more resources in their development of Lightroom in the future, in an attempt to create a truly excellent and inspiring image management tool. Only time will tell how all this will develop. In the mean time, if you prefer, you can still use Photoshop. I have learned to accept that Lightroom is the future of Adobe and I use it for 99% of my imaging. I also hope that some of the performance issues won't turn into the same level of frustration that has plagued me over the years. It is great to see that Fuji has already adopted an evolving software solution that can now support their new sensor. Now it is time for Adobe to pick up the pace and let's see if they can address these concerns. I look forward to seeing where the future will take us.
