The three main functions, tools, and panels are self-explanatory, and an excellent user guide helps you get started. Photoshop is a very highly organized professional style of editing. Each tool is logically categorized and most tools have drop down menus so that users can set their own preferred operation. For example, "Layer" has a large drop down menu with more than 20 different settings. There is no need to select a "ops" which is a Process that is used to perform a specific task. There are four main tasks available for the user: - Long press or double click on the tool icon shown on the tool bar to get a drop down listing. This is the menu best for editing is better to be used rather than clicking on the tool to see the menus. - Layers : Use the "layers" tool available on the bottom of the layers panel. If you creates a new layer you can adjust the layer settings to your desired settings, the process is similar to that of the "layers" build in the layer panel. You can "lock" (make it do not edit) or "hide" (make it not visible on the canvas when image is previewed) the layer. Layers are a key part of photoshop as layers are the building blocks of all digital images. You can see all the layers in the "layers" menu. Layers can also be grouped together to make for easier working. You can adjust layer properties such as color and size, opacity, blend and mask settings. Generally a global group change or individual settings are initially set and then you need to set new ones you want. The same way you lock and hide layers.
