If you're not a huge fan of the Windows desktop, you have only a couple of choices: use the desktop, Windows 8, or the Metro UI. Lightroom 5 is a Windows only application, and the Windows 8 version is a stripped down desktop version with no options for changing or customizing the UI. You can't activate Lightroom in Windows 8, and every time you launch Lightroom, it boots up in the desktop. Adobe doesn't provide command line parameters for Photoshop. Instead, you have to use the Internet. Ad hoc image creation, catalog changes, simulation, and conversion operations have to be done on an accessible file system. I can't help but wonder how many Windows 7 users were too frightened or intimidated to experiment with Photoshop on the surface of their hard drive. Currently there are no substitute applications for Photoshop's image-manipulation features. Adobe doesn't allow third-party image manipulation or processing plugins. Photoshop users have good reason to feel uneasy about the stability of any third-parti plugins in version 5 of the program. Photoshop users have long complained that the general user interface lacks features and options as it does in all of the other Adobe programs. Photoshop users have also long been unhappy with the Photoshop UI's lack of unit testing capability, and it's almost impossible to test a Photoshop UI on a Win 7 system because Photoshop and Windows do not play well. Lightroom 2.2 is some combination of an educational software, a desktop reference book and a photoshop alternative, as stated above. Perhaps, it would have made a better job of balancing the need to meet the users' expectations and what it was supposed to offer. This version of Lightroom is designed to make you become a master of critical processes. That is not entirely a bad idea. But it sometimes does not clearly state what it can and cannot do. To be fair, it was also not designed with an eye towards growing a community of users. Sure, it includes a lot of features and automation, but it is perhaps too much for the casual user. Lightroom is, after all, designed to work with specific RAW formats that are quite rare these days. On the bright side, Lightroom no longer requires a Mac or OS X 10.6. The latest release drops the minimum requirement to 10.6.3, but that is not the only change in store. With the latest version all of the plug-ins for Photoshop are no longer on the Mac side, but on the iPad side. All of that makes the interface a bit more confusing, as you must find your way around the new windows and tabs. My personal feeling is that no matter how you slice it, Lightroom 2.2 has a lot of “road bumps” that are sure to make some users wary of it. I guess we can only see what software experts can currently do with the app.

Over the last three years, Chrome has been working to empower web applications that want to push the boundaries of what's possible in the browser. One such web application has been Photoshop. The idea of running software as complex as Photoshop directly in the browser would have been hard to imagine just a few years ago. However, by using various new web technologies, Adobe has now brought a public beta of Photoshop to the web. If you prefer watching over reading, this article is also available as a video. This can be slightly overwhelming because there are a few different Creative Cloud plans to pick from according to what your area of interest is. To make things simple there are 3 different options that you will have to choose from that include Photoshop. First the ‘Photography’ plan which is $9.99/mo and grants you access to Adobe Photoshop and also Adobe Lightroom which is a program that allows for detailed photo editing. This is a great value considering the second option is $20.99/mo for use of only Photoshop. The third and final option which I think is the best option is the Student and Teacher plan that is $19.99/mo and includes access to every Adobe program available. This is an amazing value because you get access to everything Adobe has to offer. From there you can learn and try new programs that Adobe offers to see what your favorite is. The Photoshop team is excited to announce new desktop and web updates to the world's number one image editing application for digital professionals. This release is led by the Photoshop community with broad input from the Adobe Design team. Adobe is part of the Creative Cloud, which includes other popular tools like Adobe Illustrator. Adobe is making Photoshop more intuitive and easy to use so professionals can make and share amazing images and videos on any surface, including smartphones and tablets. "As consumption patterns shift and professionals are increasingly expected to focus on collaboration and the digital enterprise, we're accelerating the innovations happening inside Photoshop for the future," said Angela Ahrendts, CEO of Adobe. "In an era of artificial intelligence, data and augmented reality, Photoshop is reimagining the creative process. The new features expand Adobe Photoshop's appeal to professionals who want to drive their work from any device, but are also available on the PC, Mac, iOS, and Android." "Sharing and collaborating in Photoshop is most often a desktop workflow struggle," said Brian Smith, senior vice president of photography at Adobe. "Adobe believes that the Photoshop onboarding experience should be easy, intuitive, collaborative, and assist users with varying skills. This is what we're delivering in Share for Review through configurable templates, auto-complete feature suggestions, and other collaborative editing tools that work on both the desktop and in a native browser. With the addition of new features that allow users to change settings, modify images, and even replace objects with a single action, we're expanding Adobe Photoshop for those users who want to more intuitively and efficiently explore their creativity in new ways."
